ABE POLLIN

GOVERNOR- CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD

Abe Pollin is arguably the biggest entertainer in the Washington metropolitan area. Period. More than 30 million people have come to his house—also known as Capital Centre—to watch his Washington Bullets and Washington Capitals and hundreds of concerts and family shows. Why even President Ronald Reagan has been over for a visit or two! It goes without saying that the entire Washington population is appreciative of Pollin's diligent efforts.

Pollin realized this dream to provide a facility where young and old alike could enjoy an evening of wholesome entertainment more than a dozen years ago—December 2, 1973 to be exact. But it wasn't easy. Inclement weather and legal roadblocks stood in the way but, through it all, Pollin persevered. Fifteen months after breaking ground Pollin had completed his first-class sports/entertainment facility.

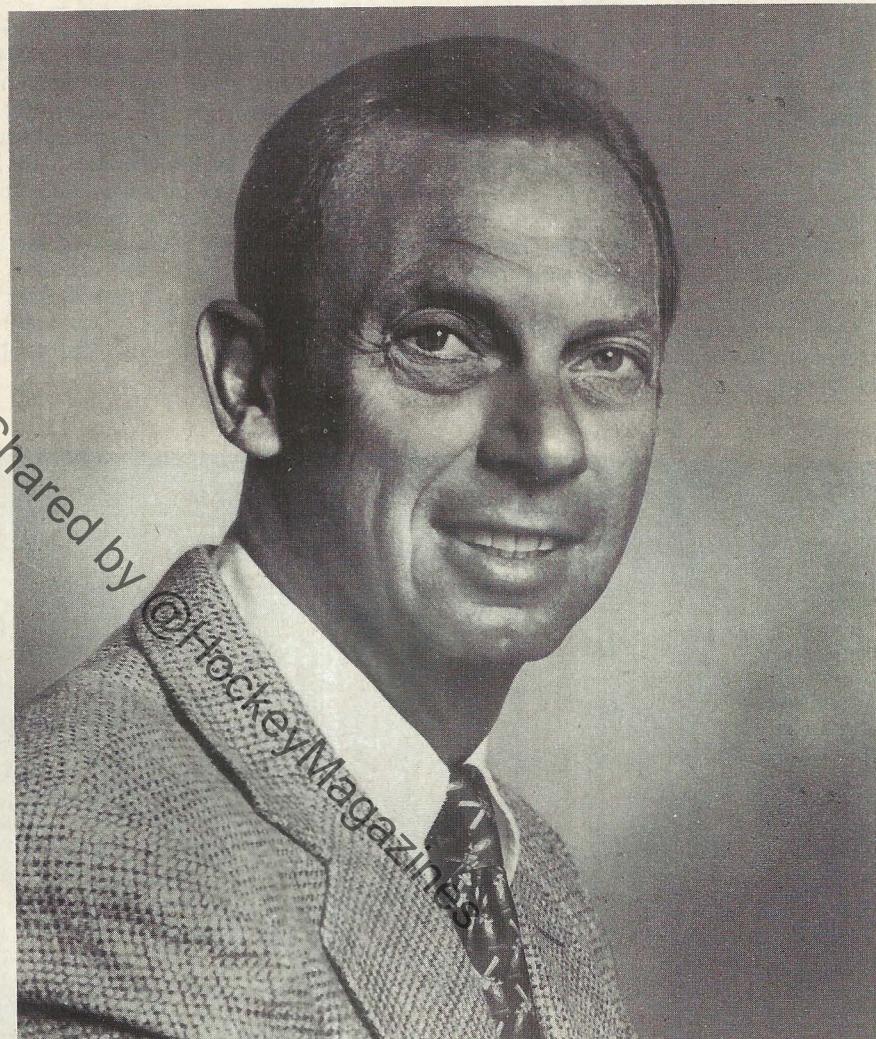

As in the case of building the arena on schedule, the odds were often against Pollin, as usually is the case with men of vision who are not afraid to dare or confront a challenge.

In 1980, Pollin defied the doomsayers. Many thought that Pollin, after undergoing quadruple bypass heart surgery, would abandon the topsy-turvy world of professional sports for health reasons. However, Pollin rebounded with panache, becoming an avid walker and staying as active as ever in his business interests.

Clearly, Pollin does not acknowledge the meaning of the word "impossible." No one should tell him he cannot do something. He is not easily discouraged.

Born December 3, 1923 to Morris and Jennie Pollin, Abe was raised in a close family atmosphere with his two brothers, Harold and Jack. After his family moved from his birthplace of Philadelphia to Washington, he toiled as an early morning laborer in his father's plumbing/contracting business. Following his graduation from George Washington University in 1945, he continued in the family business, which was renamed Morris Pollin and Sons and had expanded into construction. By 1957, he had decided to become "the master of his own destiny" and formed his own construction business.

His adventurous nature soon resulted in construction contracts for apartment and office buildings throughout the metropolitan area. He won countless awards for construction and design, and holds the distinction of being the first Washington contractor to build an apartment house with a swimming pool on the roof.

In 1964, sports became next on the list of Pollin's endeavors. Collaborating with partners, he purchased the NBA Baltimore Bullets for $1.1 million—a record amount at the time. Four years later, he purchased complete ownership from his two investors and became the team's sole owner.

Despite the team's success on the court, attendance continued to lag. Pollin soon faced the financial necessity of either selling the team or moving it to a more lucrative market. Since the Bullets already had become a vital part of his life, the choice was simple. Thus he looked southward to create a sports/entertainment facility worthy of the nation's capital. His choice of location placed the new arena within a 30 minute drive of three million people and within 45 minutes of four million.

Despite his responsibilities as chairman of the board of the Capital Centre and president of the Bullets and the Capitals, Pollin is a devout family man and a recognized leader in community service.

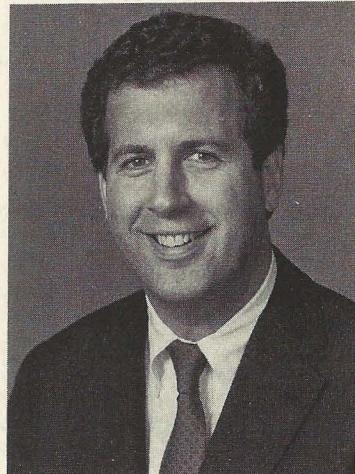

Pollin's wife, Irene, is a humanitarian in her own right with a distinguished career as a psychotherapist. The couple resides in Bethesda, Md., and are avid travelers. Their older son, Robert, and his wife, Sigrid, live in Riverside, Cal., with their daughters, Emma Linda and Hanna Martha. Their younger son, Jim, lives in New York City.

In Markesan, Wisconsin, there's a doctor who still practices a rare art: The house call.

And what makes his visits truly remarkable is the fact that Dr. Alan Lippert routinely drives through some of the worst weather conditions imaginable to respond to an emergency.

How does he do it? In a Subaru "On Demand"™ Four Wheel Drive Wagon.

As Dr. Lippert says, "the residents in the Markesan area depend on me. So I depend heavily on my Subaru to get me through washed out roads, torrential rains and mud holes. Not to mention 3 foot snow drifts."

"Moreover, there's ample cargo space for all my medical supplies. And when your patients are 1400 pound registered Holsteins you need to carry around a lot more than a little black bag."

In Markesan, Dr. Lippert has earned quite a reputation for being reliable 24 hours a day, in all kinds of weather.

A reputation a lot like his car.

COACHES/CAPITALS HOCKEY MANAGEMENT

DOUG MACLEAN

Assistant Coach

Begins his first season as a Capitals assistant coach after serving two years in that capacity with St. Louis... Was in charge of pre-scouting, video and statistical information of players as well as much on-ice instruction while with St. Louis... Before joining the Blues, MacLean served as head coach at the University of New Brunswick... Received a master's degree in educational psychology at the University of Western Ontario... Played collegiate hockey at University of Prince Edward Island... Doug and Jill live in Ontario with their son, Clark, during the off-season.

WARREN STRELOW

Goaltending Coach

Considered by many NHL experts to be the best goaltending coach in the league... Is serving his sixth season as the "goaltending guru" for the Capitals... Warren has gotten positive results wherever he has worked... Spent seven seasons as an assistant coach to Herb Brooks while at the University of Minnesota... The Gophers won three NCAA championships during Warren's tenure there... Strelow's next stop was as the goaltending coach of the 1980 Gold medal-winning US Olympic Hockey Team... After working three seasons for NHL Central Scouting, Warren became the Capitals goaltending coach in 1983-84... His appointment paid immediate dividends as the Capitals goaltending tandem of Al Jensen and Pat Riggin won the Jennings Trophy for lowest goals-against average... Since his arrival in Washington, the Capitals have compiled the NHL's lowest goals-against average (3.13)... Was a former varsity hockey and baseball coach at Mahtomedi High School in Minnesota... Warren and his wife, Karlene, make their home in Minnesota with their sons, Rick and Tom.

JACK BUTTON

Director of Player Personnel and Recruitment

If it skates, chances are that Jack Button watched it last season... Considered by many to be one of the most organized, thorough and knowledgeable hockey executives among team scouts... It was his time and effort that was largely responsible for Michal Pivonka's defection to the United States... Coming into this season, all of Button's first round selections have played for Washington... Button was a former publicity director for the Rochester Americans... Later moved to the Pittsburgh organization, first with their farm team in Amarillo in 1968-69, and later as Director of Player Personnel and General Manager with the Penguins... Has been in a hockey management position for over 25 years... Jack makes his year-round home in Pierrefonds, Quebec with his wife, Bridget, and their sons, Craig, Tod and Sean.

HUGH ROGERS

Coordinator of Scouting

Begins his first season as the Capitals assistant director of player recruitment after spending two seasons as the Capitals scout in Ontario... Spent eight seasons in the OHL... Was head scout of the Windsor Spitfires for two seasons... Worked with the Ottawa '67's when they won the Memorial Cup in 1984... Coached minor hockey in Canada for 14 seasons prior to working in the OHL... Hugh is single and lives in Waterloo, Ontario.

RIDLEY'S RAPID RISE FUELS CAPITAL OFFENSE

BY DEAN SCHUYLER

Beneath the calm exterior of Mike Ridley, there burns a competitive fire that may someday take him to the upper echelons of stardom in the National Hockey League. In the first half of this, his fourth NHL season, Ridley scored 25 goals and added 17 assists to lead his team in scoring with 42 points. Comparable figures one season ago were: 13 goals, 10 assists; 23 points.

After 46 games, Ridley had already taken 111 shots on goal. He took 134 all of last season. It was evident that this year's Washington Capitals needed more offensive production. By mid-season, it was clear that Ridley would lead the way.

The 25 year old center iceman from Winnipeg had finished last season strongly, with 13 goals and 18 assists in his final 25 games. With six goals and eleven points in fourteen playoff games, he continued his fine play into the post-season.

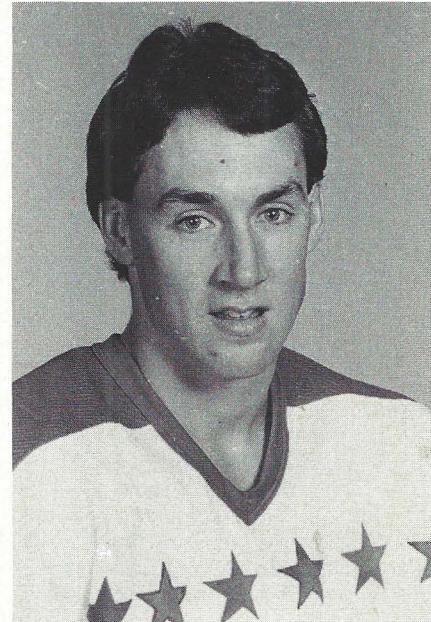

"I'm playing the same now as I was the second half of last year and in the playoffs," Ridley said, prior to the Capitals' January homestand. "I feel comfortable and confident. A lot of it is in my head. I'm not getting down anymore. It's been a lot more enjoyable for me."

Even more significant than goals and assists, Ridley seems to have conquered the perfectionism that has dogged him. "It's the same thing that happened to me early in college and my first year in the juniors. I wouldn't meet some standard I had set, and I'd get down quickly. As my hockey skills improved and as I got more used to my surroundings, it got easier for me."

This summer, Ridley worked hard to be less hard on himself. "I would picture myself in situations in which I didn't achieve what I wanted to. For example, I'd shoot and hit the post. I would consider the alternatives. I could try harder, or I could sulk."

"Last game, for example, I had missed every chance even though I think I was playing pretty well. I told myself: 'Gee, I can hardly wait 'til the next shift to get it going.'"

When Ridley saw the effect his reactions were having on some of his teammates, that was a compelling reason to change. When he became aware that similar outcomes came to other shooters, he began to take it all less personally.

"Last game," he said, "I told Garts (former teammate Mike Gartner): 'Neither of us can buy a break.' We promised each other to keep going after it. It ended up that we got the third goal (in a 3-0 Caps victory over Toronto)."

Coach Bryan Murray is delighted with Ridley's success. "He worked very hard this summer on a leg strength program with Strength Coach Frank Costello. He's jumping on a lot of loose pucks this season. His strength has become a tremendous asset for him."

But there are additional factors to account for the rise in Ridley's production. "So many go into the game," he said. "The nutritionist (Dr. Pat Mann) has helped me out with diet, and I learned about the importance of fluid intake. Now I come home after a game and drink a half a gallon of liquid."

Although Ridley regards himself as a playmaker first and a goal scorer second, he put some big numbers in his hockey

résumé beginning at age 18 in Tier II play. One year he scored 91 goals (but also had 100 assists!). In his two years at the University of Manitoba, he scored 39 goals (in 46 games) and 29 goals (in 30).

In 1985, he was given a trial with the New York Rangers and made the team in training camp. He led that team in scoring (22 goals, 43 assists) and was selected to the NHL All-Rookie team. The first half of his second year with the Rangers predicted an even better sophomore season.

Then came the sudden trade to Washington (with Kelly Miller and Bob Crawford for Bobby Carpenter and a 1989 second round draft pick) on January 1, 1987. It was sudden for Ridley, but the culmination of a lengthy effort by Capitals' GM David Poile.

"Given the circumstances, it was the most significant trade I've made," Poile said. "We had identified Ridley as an up and coming young player with offensive ability. In trading Carpenter, I knew we had to acquire some goal scoring. We looked at the goals he had scored against the Caps. We knew that in juniors, he had always scored goals. Most important, we knew that Ridley liked to score goals. The trade has worked out really well for us."

A great deal for Washington, it had been a real adjustment for Ridley. "The trade was tough, when you've never been traded before," he said.

"Now, I'd know what to expect. It took a full year to get it out of my mind. You have to leave people and a situation that's familiar. You don't get time to transfer over, either. We came here, practiced the next day and played the next night."

There's one sure-fire way to know that the transition from New York to Washington is complete. Ask Ridley about his pivotal role in the Rangers' upset defeat of the Caps in the 1986 playoffs. "It was a good year (1985-86) for us," he said. "But, now that I'm here and I hear them go on about Washington's playoff troubles, I sometimes wish the Rangers would've lost that series!"

Capitals' coaches are unanimous about how difficult it is to convert a player from playmaker to goal scorer, once he's reached hockey maturity. Ridley's first-half performance would suggest he's made that transition too, and without giving up his playmaking ability.

"When a playmaker beats a man, he looks to set someone up," said Mike Gartner, a former Capitals offensive leader. "I look to drive to the net. (Wayne) Gretzky and (Mario) Lemieux can do either. I don't think it's possible to change. You would have to be exceptionally talented. There are few who can turn a switch and change."

In Ridley, Murray may have found that offensive contributor he knew Washington needed to complement Gartner and Dave Christian. "He's scored some unbelievable goals this year," Murray said of Ridley. "And he's finding more people open on a regular basis too."

In an early season game against Pittsburgh, Ridley scored four goals, rallying the Caps from 6-1 down. In a mid-season game against Chicago, Ridley had six assists, tying a Capitals team record.

Ridley and teammate Kelly Miller are friends, were traded to Washington together, and frequently play on the same offensive line. "I met Rids when we came to the Rangers," Miller said. "We played together at the start. Even when we're separated, we seem to always come back and play together. He's got that touch to put the puck in the net. He's always a threat to score. We have a certain chemistry. I can dump the puck and know he'll be there."

Murray finds no real contradiction between Ridley as the soft-spoken person and the fiery competitor. He predicts you'll see a lot of the young center iceman in the season's second half. "He's not outspoken; kind of shy," the Coach said. "He has a real sense of humor and is very warm to everybody. Mike Ridley expresses himself on the ice."

"Now, I can put him out in all situations. He's always going to play on a top line. And his line will spend a lot of time on the ice."

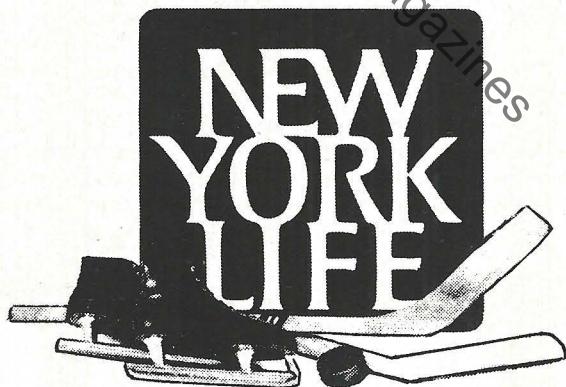

With only three and a half years of professional play under his belt, Ridley has accomplished a lot. He's well on his way to a career year. He has answered the Capitals' call for more goals. He continues to be generous in setting up his linemates. He has adapted comfortably to life and hockey in Washington. He has conquered a psychological self-demandingness, and turned it into a competitive prod to succeed.

All this could not have come at a better time for the Capitals offense. Nor could it have happened to a more deserving guy.

CAPITALS HEALTH CORPS

SOPHISTICATED AND READY

BY DEAN SCHUYLER

The group responsible for the health care of the Washington Capitals is a team within a team. It has been assembled by the decisions of several among Caps management over the years. It is safe to say that, over the fourteen year history of the franchise, the health care team is now at its highest level ever in sophistication and capability.

At the vortex of acute care there is Stan Wong, for three years the Capitals' Head Trainer. "I'm always the first guy out on the ice when there's an injured player," he said. "I try to relax him, calm him down and ask what the problem is. Often it's not as plain as it may seem."

"I do a systematic evaluation. To get it right, I have kept a close watch on the game. I try to help decrease the player's heart rate by encouraging deep, slow breathing. Most players have a good idea of what the injury is. But the player can be in momentary shock, and different people react differently. Some just say: 'I'm all right.' You have to know the player's personality."

An injured player may recover and remain on the ice, may go straight to the bench or may be taken to the locker room. He may be assisted off with or without a stretcher, or leave under his own power.

In an 80-game schedule, Wong estimates that he goes out on the ice about 60 times. "Sometimes I go out just to gain a player some time to recover and to let him know I'm aware of the situation," he said.

An athletic training major at Northeastern University in Boston, Wong received his certification and then worked in pro football for the Philadelphia Eagles and then in the USFL before joining the Caps in 1986. He is knowledgeable about the different stresses on the body associated with football and hockey.

"For muscle injuries, you have to first identify the function of the muscle in hockey," he said. "There are, for example, few hamstring injuries in hockey because the mechanism of running differs from skating. The shoulders take a beating from contact in hockey. And I've learned that knees were just not invented for sports!"

There are many useful approaches to an injured muscle: heat, massage and electrical stimulation are three of them. There are multiple ways to apply heat to a muscle, depending upon the depth of heat desired: heat pack, whirlpool, ultrasound, diathermy, to name a few. It's a complex profession.

When further diagnostic evaluation or treatment is required, the Capitals' Medical Team is called into play. There is a physician in attendance at each game: Dr. Stephen Haas and his partner Dr. Carl MacCartee Jr., both orthopedists with a special interest in Sports Medicine, have been with Washington since 1981. They operate a Sports Medicine Center at two locations in the Washington area which offer up to the minute personnel and equipment for continuing care and rehabilitation.

They work with teams at Georgetown University, George Washington University, consult to the PGA Golf Tour, and work with the Bullets as well as the Capitals. "We started our practice together," MacCartee said. "At that time, it was unusual to go into Sports Medicine. The Caps wanted top notch orthopedic coverage and GM Roger Crozier came to us. We maintain a list of specialists all over the U.S. and Canada should they be needed when the team is away from home. Our main job is to make sure that there is continuity of care."

The responsibilities of Haas and MacCartee include doing physical exams, medical administration, and screening players whom the Caps have an interest in drafting or acquiring in trade. The NHL, by rule, mandates that the home team provide a physician at each game to take care of both teams. One to several physicians accompany the Capitals to playoff road games.

"There's more on the line for a team in the playoffs," Haas said. "I don't want to make a decision about whether or not the other team's star player gets back on the ice after an injury. We have flexible schedules and understanding spouses and it's become a way of life for us."

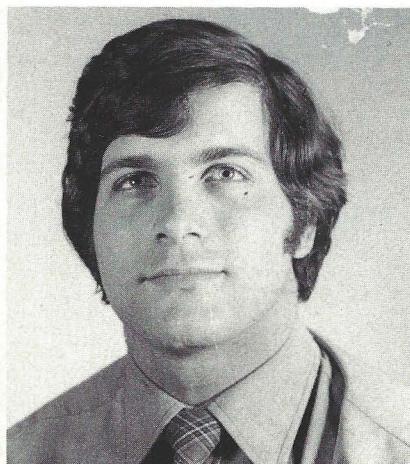

"At the games," he continued, "we've seen a little bit of everything. You can't have a team of specialists at the games, so we do screening and triage. We do the basics and have a staff of consultants on call. It's important to know the demands, the stresses, the limits and the rules of hockey."

The injuries are mostly what a fan would expect from a fast, physical, collision-impact sport like hockey. Knees and shoulders are particularly vulnerable. "Sticks and pucks," Haas said, "separate hockey from the rest, however. They produce lacerations which may be life-threatening. Mike Gartner and Brian Engblom had partially detached retinas, eye injuries that are potentially catastrophic. Neck and spine injuries are the most worrisome and fortunately, there have been none."

Perhaps the scariest injury in recent times occurred in the Capital Centre to defenseman Greg Smith. "He was hit with a stick in the throat," trainer Wong recalled. "It came close to crushing his larynx and trachea. It could have been life-threatening. Protection of the throat is a big problem with a flying projectile (puck) and the extension of arms (stick)."

Rod Langway's skate cut by Pat Verbeek during last year's playoffs was a serious injury due to the depth of the cut sustained by his gastrocnemius (calf) muscle. He had surgery that night to repair it, and it is apparent to the medical team that it has healed quite well.

One of the most important roles of the sports physician is to decide who can play and who cannot; what is urgent and what can wait. These are often tests of judgment. It's necessary that the doctor be aware of the game, the team's management philosophy and where the team is in the season, so he can factor all these issues into his decision.

"Having an understanding with management about decision making is crucial," Haas said. "Fortunately, Bryan (Murray) and David (Poile) are very enlightened in their medical policies. They have great trust in us and we in them. They have the best equipment available and never question the decision to bring consultants in."

The opportunity to "follow up" your sports patients may be unexcelled anywhere else in medicine. "We read about them in the paper and can watch them perform in person," Haas said. "The outcome of your work is all in the public eye. It's a real test of the physician's judgment and skill. And we watch the game very differently from the average fan."

Four years ago, Haas and MacCartee asked Dr. Frank Melograna, a urologist, to work with them and to be available at each home game. Melograna has an office near Capitals Centre, knew Haas and MacCartee from their days together in residency, and was then a Capitals season's ticket holder and a committed hockey fan.

He has been the doctor most often on the front lines ever since. "Some nights, you sit and it's quiet," he said. "Other nights, all hell break's loose. The most common things I see are facial lacerations and I do a lot of suturing. The guys who wear face shields are protected. Most often, however, I serve as another pair of surgical hands."

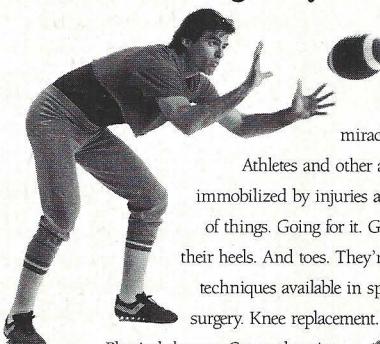

It isn't easy to integrate a full-time hockey job with a full time medical practice. "You schedule your days around hockey," Melograna said, "It's hard to get out of bed for a 7A.M. conference in the hospital after a busy game the night before."

Three years ago, the medical team recruited Dr. Richard Grossman whom Haas had taught when Grossman was an orthopedic resident at Georgetown. Having spent time with his brother, another orthopedist who has worked with all the New York sports teams, Grossman leaped at the opportunity to associate with the Caps.

"I started in March 1986, crunch time for the Caps, in a game against the Islanders. Dennis Potvin put his leg out and fractured Gus' (Bengt Gustaffson's) leg. He didn't hurt much but Gus said that the bump he'd always had in his leg was gone.

"They brought him to the dressing room and I examined him. I got a barrage of questions. Everyone was looking over my shoulder. I hadn't learned yet to tell everyone to leave the room. I got an x-ray and told David (Poile): 'He's out for 2-3 months.' Poile said: 'Are you sure the x-ray's not wrong?'"

Grossman echoed the other doctors when he said, "The players are good, young people who continue to play no matter what. They're really tough and I love working with them."

The newest Capital doc was also in New Jersey the night of the "playoff game with the two concussions" last season. He saw the shot that Pete Peeters took on his forehead.

"I was seated far from the ice," Grossman said. "As I walked out, I thought I'd fall flat on my face in front of all those people. When I got there, Pete was dazed. We put his neck in a collar and I decided to go to the hospital with him since we were on the road and I didn't know where they'd take him. I got an immediate CAT scan and it became apparent that Pete would be o.k. Then, I heard from a radiology technician watching the game that (Garry) Galley was knocked out and he was on his way there, too."

If the doctors are busy, the dentist with a hockey team must be overwhelmed. Howard Salob, D.D.S., has an office one-half mile from Capital Centre. He has been the team dentist since 1977. He's not required to attend the games, but hits a minimum of 38 of the 40 home games! During the season, his life revolves around the Cap Centre.

He doesn't travel with the team on the road, but chooses to close his practice down during the playoffs. "Teams are superstitious," he said. "and they like to have familiar personnel along." Salob is responsible for the Capitals routine dental care. He also makes customized mouthguards for the players in his office. Made from moulds of their own teeth.

"It's much better than what you can buy in sporting goods stores," he said. Mouthguards have made a major difference in helping hockey players preserve the set of teeth God gave them. "Despite the image of Bobby Clarke with no teeth," Salob said, "most players today have their own natural teeth."

Salob can recall only two major dental injuries in his 11 years with the Capitals. "In the four overtime games against the Islanders. (Mike) Gartner and (Scott)

Stevens each broke teeth. I saw them in my office the next day. Then, in February 1988, Stevens was hit in the mouth with a stick in New York. He fractured a tooth and displaced several others. The mouthguard probably saved his teeth.

General Manager David Poile made one major addition to the Caps health care team last year, and two more this pre-season. "In our preparation for putting a team on the ice," he said, "we realized that hockey has been behind some other sports in its concern for conditioning. So, we hired Frank Costello of the University of Maryland."

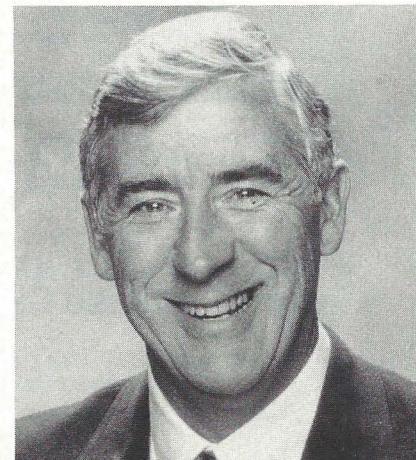

Costello's work involves helping the players to increase their strength, endurance and flexibility. He employs different exercises including an Eastern European technique called plyometrics. These exercises develop explosive power through jumping. Costello supervises the Caps circuit training as well as their in-season conditioning and off-season running programs.

Dr. Pat Mann, also of the University of Maryland, was hired to be the team's nutritionist. "It's amazing," trainer Wong said, "that players in the past competed, eating McDonald's hamburgers and paying little attention to dehydration (water loss)."

The most recent addition is Dr. Jim McGee, Director of Psychology at Sheppard Pratt Hospital in Baltimore, who will serve as team psychologist. When Poile contacted McGee about one year ago, the psychologist's response was lukewarm. He had worked with the Orioles in their championship season (1983) and was "enjoying his retirement from the hectic world of pro sports." He had also never been to a hockey game.

When the mutual sleuthing by Caps management and by McGee pointed to a real opportunity for both. McGee joined up. The Caps sent him to training camp and on the road for the pre-season exhibition games. To continue his hockey education. Murray asked McGee to coach one team in an intra-squad scrimmage.

"Mike Gartner told me: 'Come on Doc, you've got to say something.' I was at a loss, so I told five of them to go out and start a fight with somebody...and they did. I had to learn to change lines, and the players taught me. I lost 5-1. There were pucks and bodies flying everywhere."

McGee believes it's as least as important to know the lifestyle of the athletes and the pressure they're under as well as it is to know the rules of the game. By the end of the pre-season, he had learned the game to a surprising extent. Now, what would his role be?

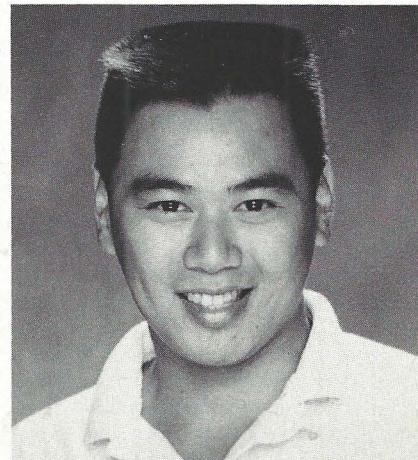

"To the Orioles, I delivered mental health services mostly and the smaller part of my job was performance enhancement. With the Caps just the opposite will be true. I was involved with the Orioles during the peak of the drug problem in baseball. I established the first drug testing program in the country for a sports team. With the Caps, I feel confident that there are no significant drug problems at this time."

McGee will do evaluations of players' emotional health. He will develop an evaluation scale to assist in player recruitment. Mainly though, he will work in helping players achieve the success their talent dictates.

"Intensity wins a game and consistency wins games in sequence," he said. "That's the difference between champions and the guys in second place. The physical skills do not change much. It's day-to-day consistency that wins. And that's a mental characteristic."

With a bachelor's degree from LaSalle College, a Ph.D. from Catholic University, and post-doctoral training at S.U.N.Y. Stony Brook, McGee believes that his six years in the Marine Corps was the best preparation for understanding hockey.

An overview of the Caps Health Corps was offered by trainer Wong: "We have the best people in each area. No longer is the trainer responsible for all aspects. We have a large staff, working together, and that's what makes it all jell." The health care team is prepared to work through a lengthy post-season to help bring a championship to Washington.

DID YOU KNOW:

The Capitals average 4.40 goals per game in playoff wins, and average 2.31 goals per game when they lose.

DID YOU KNOW:

The Capitals are 10-11 on the road in the playoffs, but 5-4 in their last nine road games.

DID YOU KNOW:

The Capitals are 3-5 in overtime. After dropping their first OT contest, they won two overtime games (both in the 1985 Division Semi-finals against the Islanders) before dropping four straight. They broke the string with a 5-4 win over the Flyers in game-seven of last year's Division Semi-finals.

DID YOU KNOW:

The Capitals are appearing in their 7th straight playoff. Only the Flyers have a longer current streak (17) in the division.

DID YOU KNOW:

The Capitals have never been shutout in 47 playoff games.

DID YOU KNOW:

A Capitals goaltender has been in the top five in playoff GAA in each of the last three seasons. Pete Peeters (2.65) placed 3rd in 1986, Bob Mason was 1st (1.75) in 1987 and Peeters' 3.12 was 4th best last season.

DID YOU KNOW:

The Capitals were involved in the 5th-longest game in playoff history. They played 128:47 of hockey before the New York Islanders' Pat LaFontaine's shot beat Bob Mason in game seven of the Patrick Division Semi-finals on 4/18-19/87.

DID YOU KNOW:

The Capitals were 4-4 at home in playoffs last season, but were outscored, 26-25. They were also 3-3 on the road last season, and outscored the opposition, 29-24, despite a 10-4 loss in New Jersey.

DID YOU KNOW:

Dale Hunter is tied for 2nd with Bob Nystrom on the NHL's all-time list for lifetime playoff overtime goals with four.

DID YOU KNOW:

Since the NHL split into four divisions in 1974-75, the Patrick Division has placed more teams in the Stanley Cup finals (11) and is tied with the Adams Division for most Cup Champions (five). The Adams Division claims nine finalists, while the Smythe Division has won four Cups and been in seven finals. The Minnesota North Stars were the lone Norris Division representative in the finals, having played against the Islanders in 1981.

DID YOU KNOW:

Six members of the Capitals have played in a Stanley Cup final series: Don Beaupre (1981 with Minnesota) Geoff Courtnall (1988 with Edmonton), Pete Peeters (1980 with Philadelphia), Rod Langway (1979 with Montreal), Neil Sheehy (1986 with Calgary) and Dino Ciccarelli (1981 with Minnesota).

SEEMS LIKE OLD TIMES

Fans that attended the Flyers-Caps game February 5 were treated to a bit of nostalgia, as they watched the Capitals' alumni battle it out. It was a fun time for everyone as they watched guys like Labre, Sirois, Palmateer and Lalonde perform their skills, albeit a bit slower than in their prime. The Red team tied the White team, 2-2, as the Red team took advantage of a 14 on 5 man advantage to knot the score.

Funny, but we don't remember Bryan Watson ever smiling when he was an NHL regular.

By the year 2000, 2 out of 3 Americans could be illiterate.

It's true.

Today, 75 million adults... about one American in three, can't read adequately. And by the year 2000, U.S. News & World Report envisions an America with a literacy rate of only 30%.

Before that America comes to be, you can stop it... by joining the fight against illiteracy today.

Standard Leasing Corp.

We've taken license with our phone number to convey the following message:

You can lease the brand new car (or fleet) of your choice. No repair headaches ever. Because we pick up, deliver, and provide a loaner. And you can arrange for it all by phone. Call 699-1030 for all the details.

What's more, your lease can be tailored to your exact needs, with no separate finance or interest charges. Insurance and maintenance costs can be included if you wish. And you'll get complete payment and cost records for accounting purposes.

It's the Standard deal. We agree there's nothing standard about it. But we have too much riding on our name to change it now.

WMAL/WCAO

For the third straight season WMAL (630 AM) will be the flagship station of the Washington Capitals. WMAL has a great tradition for sports broadcasting, having been the home of the Maryland Terrapins and Washington Redskins for many years.

Baltimore area hockey fans will be able to follow the Capitals on WCAO (600 AM), marking the second straight season of Caps hockey on WCAO.

RON WEBER

The Capitals have played 1,167 games during the regular season and playoffs, and Ron Weber has been there for all of them. The veteran broadcaster began his hockey career as the voice of the Baltimore Clippers from 1970 to 1972, and later became the voice of the Capitals in 1974.

In addition to his hockey duties, Ron does weekend sports at WMAL, and has done various Major League Games of the Week on radio.

Ron lives in Wheaton, Maryland with his wife, Mary Jane and daughter, Amy.

WDCA-TV (Channel 20) and HOME TEAM SPORTS

WDCA begins its 12th season of Washington Capitals hockey, broadcasting 20 road games during the 1988-89 season. WDCA also serves as the home of the Washington Bullets and Baltimore Orioles.

HTS has served as the cable home of the Capitals since the 1984 Stanley Cup Playoffs, and will broadcast 35 games throughout the season. HTS also broadcasts the Baltimore Orioles, Washington Bullets and Baltimore Blast, and will continue coverage of college football and basketball.

MIKE FORNES

The Emmy Award-winning broadcaster begins his fifth full season as the television voice. Mike's interest in hockey came early, as he was the stickboy for the Dayton Gems of the International Hockey League for three seasons.

A graduate of Kent State, the Dayton, Ohio, native began his professional broadcasting career as the voice of the Muskegon Mohawks of the IHL.

Following the Mohawks, Fornes was the voice of the Indianapolis Racers of the World Hockey Association, where he broadcasted Wayne Gretzky's first professional game. Mike got his first taste of NHL broadcasting as the play-by-play man for the Hartford Whalers. He left the Whalers in 1984 to become voice of the Capitals.

Aside from hockey broadcasts, Mike did minor league baseball for the Indianapolis Indians before coming to Washington.

AL KOKEN

Al also returns for his fifth season of Capitals hockey. The St. Louis native has spent his entire broadcast career in the Washington area. After graduating from American University in 1975, Koken began covering the Capitals and Bullets for United Press International for five years. Al also served as co-host of "Sports Talk" on WTOP radio for two and a half years, and later became sports anchor for WTTG television for three years. Al spends his summer months in Washington, cheering the exploits of Whitey Herzog and the St. Louis Cardinals.

JEFF RIMER

The Toronto native begins his fourth season of broadcasting Capitals hockey on Home Team Sports. Jeff is the host of the popular "Capitals Report" pre-game show, and his contacts throughout hockey have made him the NHL's top prognosticator with his "Rimer's Rumors." Jeff worked for CFCF in Canada before coming to Home Team Sports.

Jeff is sports director for WBAL in Baltimore, and is host of the Orioles pre-game and post-game shows on WBAL. In addition, Jeff can be seen doing weekend sports on WBAL-TV and WRC-TV.

Jeff lives in Cockeysville with his wife, Ferrell, son, Josh and daughter, Kylie.

HOCKEY'S THREE MAIN RULES

Learn these rules and you will know the cardinal principles of hockey

ICING THE PUCK

Icing the puck is not permitted when the teams are at equal numerical strength. Thus it is an infraction when a player on his team's side of the red center line shoots the puck all the way down the ice, it crosses the red goal line at any point other than the goal itself and is first touched by a defending player. When this occurs, play is stopped and the puck is returned to the other end of the ice for a face-off in the offending team's zone.

Icing the puck is not called if:

- a) the goalie plays the puck by leaving his net;
- b) if puck cuts across part of the goal crease;
- c) when a defending opponent, in the judgment of the lineman, could have played the puck before it crossed the red goal line;

- d) when an attacking player who was onside (in the same zone) when the puck was shot down the ice, manages to touch it first; and
- e) when a team is playing shorthanded because of a penalty or penalties.

OFFSIDE

A team is offside when any member of the attacking team precedes the puck carrier over the defending team's blue line. The position of the player's skates and not that of his stick is the determining factor. If both skates are over the blue line before the puck, the player is offside. If he has only one skate over the blue line and one on it, he is onside.

OFFSIDE PASS

When a player passes the puck from his defending zone to a teammate beyond the center red line (thus crossing the blue line and the red line) it is an offside pass. The position of the puck (not the player's skates in this case) is the determining factor in deciding from which zone the pass was made.

After a four-year-working agreement with the Binghamton Whalers, the Washington Capitals signed a two-year deal to move their minor league affiliation to Baltimore. The Capitals will be the sole affiliation of the Skipjacks after having shared Binghamton with the Hartford Whalers during their stay in Binghamton. The Skipjacks were independent last season after being the affiliate of Pittsburgh for five seasons.

Terry Murray gets his first taste of head coaching experience in coaching the Baltimore Skipjacks. The former veteran defenseman was an assistant with Washington the past six seasons. Terry is no stranger to the AHL, having played on two Calder Cup-winning teams in Maine. Terry also was the AHL Defenseman of the Year in 1978 and 1979.

Reserve Your Box At Center Ice For 30 Capitals Games

Home Team Sports is the next best thing to being at the Cap Centre for over 30 exclusive Capitals games this season. Our cameras put you behind the net, in the penalty box, at center ice—wherever the best view is.

From the first face-off opening night, you will have the best seats in the house all season long. Watch as the Caps take on the Stanley Cup Champion Oilers, the Islanders, Flyers and other NHL rivals. You'll even get all of the home playoffs on the house. Our exclusive, live coverage also features 90 Orioles games each season. And you'll be on hand for over 30 Bullets games (plus playoffs), college football and basketball. Plus soccer, tennis, wrestling, boxing, auto and thoroughbred racing, and special Home Team SportsBeat live call-in shows, with coverage of the Redskins. Call your cable operator today and ask for the one channel that'll make you sit down and cheer.
